ARTISTS' EXHIBITION

FOREWORD

THE most encouraging thing in connection with the Annual Midwestern Artists' Exhibition of 1929 is the very large response on the part of the artists living in this territory, and the high standard of the works submitted. More than double the entries of any previous year were submitted for jury approval, and the quality of most of the entries was such that the jury was forced to establish a standard which might have been applied to many of our eastern shows. Those who were fortunate enough to have their works accepted, may indeed congratulate themselves upon their success, and those less fortunate, while disappointed, may be assured that the problem confronting the jury was to pick the outstanding works rather than the rejection of those not eligible. If, as this exhibition indicates, the artists of the Middle West continue to progress, it will be but a short time until we may see as important an exhibition as is to be found anywhere in the country.

The Kansas City Art Institute is striving to aid Midwestern artists, and offers all the encouragement possible for a struggling institution, and we ask the continued interest of every artist whether represented in this exhibition or not.

The Midwestern Exhibition affords an opportunity for the artist to place his work before the public, and it is only by continued effort that we may hope to see satisfactory results. This exhibition offers rare opportunities to secure splendid pictures at reasonable prices.
